6. For the Beverly Hills home of entertainment executives Adam Sanderson and Rich Ross, designer Jamie Bush and architect Dennis Gibbens created a pool pavilion shaded by a semicircular canopy that echoes the roofline of the main house. The custom-made sectional sofa is upholstered in a Perennials fabric, and the concrete side tables are by Ernsdorf Design. 7. Constructed in the 1960s, the orangery at Mapperton in Dorset, England, complements the estate's 16th-century manor house and overlooks paths bordered by perennial beds. 8. In a private garden in Salento, Italy, architect Toti Semerano designed a wooden structure to shelter a daybed with a roof crafted from scraps of iron. 9. The late Sir David Hicks added a fanciful acorn finial to the roof of a gazebo he designed for a farm in the KwaZulu-Natal Midlands of South Africa. ■
